

ECO160 : Environmental and Natural Resources Economics

Environmental and Natural Resource Economics uses the basic tools of economic analysis to focus on issues pertaining to the natural environment and its resources. The topics covered include economic externalities, public goods, property rights, market failure, air and water pollution, solid waste management, sustainability concepts, the role of government, and benefit-cost analysis in social planning.

Credits 3

Prerequisites

None

Semester Offered

Fall