

PHI160 : Three Great Thinkers

Students in this course will engage in a critical examination of a number of contemporary seminal ideas central to the human experience of both Eastern and Western thinkers. Students will study the writings of three major thinkers in the history of ideas. The three will be announced before pre-registration each semester and will vary from semester to semester, so the course will never be the same. Students will explore the ideas in the course for internal consistency and for the historical contexts in which they arose, as well as the actual consequences those ideas have had in human affairs.

Credits 3

Prerequisites

ENL101: English Composition I and a previous philosophy course

Semester Offered

Varies

Notes

Satisfies a Humanities & Fine Arts (or) Behavioral or Social Science general education requirement. May be repeated once.